

Since returning after the October half term, 6J have delved into a new and enchanting book called "Skellig" by David Almond. After reading Chapter 1 together, the children stepped into the shoes of estate agents in order to sell houses on Falconer Road. Using creative language and persuasive techniques, the children did an amazing job showcasing and selling a variety of homes. What a fantastic way to learn and have fun with words!

The children have also started work on their collages inspired by Megan Coyle. Coyle describes her work as 'painting with paper,' which the children are excited to try out. So far, they have created a one-page profile on the artist and have started to plan which animal they would like to collage using Coyle's collaging techniques.
